From the picture, we can see that as the number of pivots increases, the running time firstly increases but then stays stable. Also, the slope for standard deviation becomes sharper and almost achieves the same values for the mean slope as the number of pivots increases. Thus, we can conclude that the best number of pivots for randomized select algorithm is 1 and we refute the theory developed in the Homework 2.